

Particulars of the Life of a Dissenting Minister (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Particulars of the Life of a Dissenting Minister
My Dear Children, I Inscribe this to you, who know the author, that you may learn to respect the principles of conscience by which your father has ever endeavoured to direct his conduct, and which, if they shall be allowed to direct yours, will support you under as great calamities as he has endured, should they, contrary to my earnest wishes and prayers, visit you in your future lives. As you have little other hope before you but that which may arise from your own exertions and virtues, it may not be unserviceable to you to observe how diligence, economy, and independence of mind, exercised on my part and that of your mother, have hitherto supplied you and me with many things necessary to respectability and comfort, under the most unfavorable circumstances that commonly attend any condition of human life.
