Excerpt: ... timed. This Determination of K. James the First the Church of England soon after declared to be her own in the Convocation held immediately after, when he declared () in her Canon concerning the lawful Use of the Cross in Baptism, that she therein followed the Royal Steps of her most worthy King, taken in the Conference At Hampton-Court, because he therein folio xed the Rules and the Practice of the Primitive Church. Now the Step which that King took at that Conference, was to maintain (as I have shewed) that the Church which was supported and protected by Constantine, was free from Superstition and Popery: Consequently there was no Reason why what was used in his Time., should not be continued. As therefore the Fathers before and in the Time of Constantine testify, that the Sign of the Cross was then used upon all Occasions, and the Clementine Liturgy particularly testifies that it was used at the Ministration of the Eucharist; therefore, according to the Sentiments of King James the First, and of the Church of England, who in Convocation declared herself of his Opinion in this Matter, there is no Reason why this Rite shouldnt be continued in the Ministration of the Eucharist. Whether a Discontinuance of the Use of this Rite at the Eucharist for about 150 Years in one particular Church against the Practice of the Universal Church for 1500 Years, be sufficient to cancel our Obligation to the Use of this Rite, especially when that Church has no where condemned it, may, I think, deserve a serious Consideration. 13.
