Excerpt from An Apology for Old Maids: And Other Essays Only a few hours ago I paused at a teeming book-stall in the South Station, Boston. Beside me stood Inelegant Leisure in petticoats, choosing. The emotion that rose in me was one of thankfulness that a paper famine is said to be upon us. Lot was assured that a given number of respectable citizens could avert from his town its doom. Had we, I wondered, among our huge population of novelists enough for salvation? - Well, I thought next, among another company its more hopeful.
