

Career Growth - Facts & Tips: Essential Tips On How To Have A Successful Career

Example from the book: Advising others to change career sounds really basic and a workable proposition. When it comes to us, it becomes one of the toughest decisions to implement. A career change needs lot of psychological preparing. If you have a family, that might get disrupted by your career change. The income might stop for some time. The choice itself might turn out to be a wrong one. It needs psychological strength to change career. Let us see what it requires. A change of career shifts us from a comfort zone to a zone full of discomfort in the beginning. For a full time creation engineer, a change to a career as human resources consultant might need a total about turn, back to school and learning new skills for the new job. Numerous people change careers so totally that it looks incredible. Let us talk about changes that could be done more smoothly. I am talking about learning about a new career together with the old one and then shifting to the new career slowly. This procedure also requires psychological strength, because it needs lot of extra work. The initial barrier that one encounters whilst thinking of career change is- how did I get into a wrong career? What if my new choice also turns out to be wrong? What if I continue with my present career? Why should I change my career? A number of these questions need head to answer and some questions are for the heart like asking why did I chose the wrong career to start with, might include damage to self esteem, and acceptance of failure. Before thinking of changing career, one needs to do analysis of life goals, and deciding about how the present career doesnt satisfy those goals. Only after deciding that something drastic needs to be done can one think about changing career. One has to develop psychological and emotive strength to undergo these changes and emerge a winner again. Table of Contents: Career Change - Develop The Mental Strength To
