

The Good Englishwoman (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Good Englishwoman My uncle Joseph, a solitary man, once broke the silence of a country walk by asserting with explosive emphasis: I dont see how any man can understand women. I assented vaguely, and he went on: How can we ever grasp their point of view, my dear boy, which is so totally different from ours? How can we understand the outlook on life of beings whose instincts, training, purpose, ambitions have so little resemblance to ours? For my part I have given up trying: it is a waste of time. Never let a woman flatter you into thinking that you understand her: she is trying to make you her tool. The Egyptians gave the Sphinx a womans face and they were right. Women are so mysterious. And the south-west wind took up his words and whispered them to the trees, which nodded their heads and waved their branches, rustling mysterious, mysterious in all their leaves.
