

Land Nationalisation: The Key to Social Reform (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Land Nationalisation: The Key to Social Reform The land question is the most important item of any programme of national reform, for the land is the key to social reconstruction, but land questions are difficult to follow and are consequently unpopular. If his views were to find expression, the average man, if buttonholed by an ardent land reformer, would probably say something like this: Yes, I agree that the question of land reform is of enormous importance; you may be right that the only way out of the difficulties that surround us and the only way of reducing the cost of living is to get more out of the land, and that the only way of getting the most out of the land is for the nation to own it; but to prove that to me you have got to do something more than give me a long string of complaints about the present system.
