Not illustrated. 1919 edition. Excerpt: ... XIV APOLLO AND BACCHUS -pIRE-DRAKES and furies! Kill her m for coming back to her lawful hus JL band! cried Festus, when Evander stood before him and his wife and proclaimed the dreadful tidings. Livia fainted immediately, and when they had restored her to consciousness, Evander spoke to her husband. Understand, he said, that this dreadful affair has nothing whatever to do with me. While Livia was swimming away from me, I, on my side, had already begun to feel doubtful also. We were not so perfectly suited to one another as we imagined, and she must not think that she was the only one to find it out. I had slowly but surely begun to see it; before long I might even have brought her back to you myself. But Apollo--that is a very different matter. The Divine Archer takes the gravest possible view of Livias conduct and will surely destroy her, because she has made his name a laughing-stock. I never did, declared the unfortunate victim of Apollos anger. I honestly thought I was going to be his servant and follower; but you showed me I wasnt. You cannot help your destiny, any more than you can help your nature. Plenty of people have changed their gods without dying for it. No man or woman plays fast and loose with Apollo, answered Evander. You have done a dreadful thing, but on my knees I implored the Giver of Light to let you off. I offered to do anything in my power. Then Festus spoke and revealed the extent of his love. Rather than that should happen, he said, I will give up my own hope of happiness. If Livia is to die, I die also. But anything that can happen is better than her death. Since that is the awful doom pronounced upon her, you had better take her back, Evander, and train her in the worship of Apollo. Be...
