

The Camel and the Needles Eye (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Camel and the Needles Eye
My original intention was to collect together a number of essays on some of the most important bearings of the question of the expenditure of riches. After corresponding with those whom I had invited to join me in this undertaking, I became aware that in spite of our substantial agreement on main principles it would be difficult to secure uniformity in the treatment of the theme, and impossible to carry on any sustained argument through the varied contributions of different people writing from different points of view. Accordingly I came to the conclusion that I must renounce the co-operation of men well qualified to speak, whose knowledge and experience would have given their opinions special weight, and work out my own argument unaided. Had I approached the subject from the standpoint of a scientific economist, I should have hesitated to enter upon such a formidable task. About the Publisher
